As well as doing your day-to-day activities.

BUT WHY CAN QUITTING SMOKING FEEL DIFFICULT?

Cigarettes contain a substance called nicotine which rushes to your brain when you smoke. However, the nicotine does not last long in your brain – when the nicotine levels drop, your brain and body go into a state of 'withdrawal'. Nicotine withdrawal may trigger feelings of irritability, anxiety, stress and low mood and can make you crave another cigarette.

THE NICOTINE WITHDRAWAL CYCLE

- 1. Cigarette smoked
- 2. Nicotine reaches the brain
- 3. Withdrawal symptoms alleviated (feelings of calmness and reward
- 4. Nicotine levels drop
- 5. Nicotine withdrawal symptoms (low mood, anxiety, irritability trigger desire for another cigarette

Over time, if you continue to smoke, your brain needs more and more nicotine to keep away those withdrawal symptoms; this is known as nicotine 'tolerance'. Nicotine tolerance can increase your cravings for cigarettes and cause unpleasant withdrawal symptoms more often throughout your day – this can make you want to smoke more and more.

To quit smoking, the nicotine withdrawal cycle needs to be broken so that, with time, your unpleasant withdrawal symptoms do not interrupt your life anymore!

We understand that quitting smoking is challenging, but research shows that successfully quitting smoking can help to positively impact your mental as well as your physical health – often, ex-smokers say they experience less anxiety and depressive symptoms once they have quit smoking.

WHAT SUPPORT IS AVAILABLE TO HELP ME QUIT SMOKING?

It has been shown that willpower alone may not be sufficient to successfully quit smoking – this is why it is recommended to have behavioural support, in combination with medication. It is up to you what avenue of support you choose – it's worth talking this through with someone you trust so you choose the right option for you!
